doesn't have to use his red pen very often. And I don't think he...I think we did do that. Senator Wickersham and others have expounded on...on why we should fund the state colleges, and I don't...I'm not going to repeat what they said, but I'm going to give you a little personal history. I was the first of eight children in my family, because we didn't have money then either, who went to college. My oldest brother, when I graduated from high school, when I was in...in the summer after I graduated he said, would you like to go to college? If you do, I'll loan you the money. And I said, well, I think everybody does. So I came down here and I worked and he loaned me money. I was married the last two years and we got ourselves through school. But as a result of that our five children also went to college because they were raised to go to school. So I think it's so important, it might...this $300, $400 or $500 that we're saving these...these students on tuition might not sound like a lot. But I hope you'll look down these. It helps the elderly, it matches federal funds, it helps area agencies, those of you that have...all of you have area agencies that need money in varying degrees to match those new federal funds that have come on line recently; they were not in the early budget process even for us. It does account...it does...slipped my mind, but the lake, the NRD projects, it does the libraries. I talked about the importance of information technology and access for those people that can't afford it any other way. Libraries are still badly underfunded; this is a very modest amount, but I think it's realistic, and it does, which others have so eloquently stated, about the state college support. So, regardless of where you've
